He stated that when we speak of child guidance we should think of the whole program of character education which is made up of ideals and activities of a satisfactory home life, family relationships, individual responsibities, wise use of leisure, and training for intelligent citizenship, as well as instruction for a vocation.

COMMUNITY CHEST NEEDS AID TO REACH QUOTA

Friday is the last day of the local Community Chest drive. Never since the organization of the Community Chest and of the local council has Campbell failed to raise its quota. But this year, when relief is needed more than relief has ever before been needed, Campbell has thus far failed to gain the $2100 which was set as a goal.

Urgent pleas for assistance by Campbell residents are being made by officers of the council.

"We realize," declares W. R. Coupland, manager of the local campaign, "that frequently citizens are absent each time our workers call at their homes for their contributions. Doubtless most of these citizens would like to participate in this worthwhile cause."

Therefore the officers earnestly request that everyone who has been missed by the canvassers should do his utmost to make connections with some worker in order to contribute his sum. Subscriptions may be given to W. R. Coupland, Guy E. Farley, or to any other member of a council team.

Hunger and cold are facing men and women and children of Campbell. Help them by putting the Community Council drive over the top.

WHY CHANGE GENERALS?

We don't change horses in the middle of a stream, servants in the midst of a party, generals in the height of a battle.

The best argument for the retention of President Hoover in the White House and the election of a Republican congress, all this aside from reasons based purely on partisanship, is that President Hoover and his party have a definite program for bringing United States out of the doldrums and are now putting it into effect with favorable results that already are appreciable, and that we have no knowledge of what Governor Roosevelt and his party would do if they were in power.

To put in a Democratic administration would be trading a real program for national relief for a doubtful experiment.

While this depression came on all over the world, the Republican party was in control of this nation only. But it is the job of that party to pull us out of the hole that we dropped into while it was in power.

No thinking person who reads the newspapers and the magazines but believes that the President and the congress under the President's direction have done everything they know how to do to help the country. Now as the good effects of the policies they have inaugurated are just beginning to be felt would be a poor time to throw them overboard and try persons and a party inexperienced in handling the nation's affairs during a depression, and having no announced policy for the betterment of things that the voters can bite into.

Thinking people know that the bad times of the last three years are not due to President Hoover nor his party, and most of them realize that conditions, bad as they have been, might have been far worse except for the astuteness, the intelligence, the common sense and the ability of those who have been at the head of our government. Times might have been as bad, for instance, as they have been in Australia, England, Germany and in other nations less favored than ours. And Mr. Hoover was not president of England, Germany, Australia, nor any other country than the United States.

Keeping the nation in the hands of the Republican party in this crisis is just a matter of self-protection. It offers to us the only way out of which we can be even reasonably hopeful.

RAISING FICTION STANDARDS

The American Fiction Guild, an organization of American popular story writers, has undertaken an ambitious program for the improvement of the American fiction story of all lengths.

It is the aim of the Guild to free the American home of the pernicious influence of sordid sex stories and of the gangster-hero story which stimulates in the adolescent mind an unhealthy desire to emulate.

The Guild is eager to prove to the public that its product, as represented by the better publishers of all-fiction magazines, is wholesome, heroic, clean and appeals to the highest ideals of American youth of both sexes. It does not advocate a return to the old blood and thunder fiction. It merely wishes to make it plain that the American popular story issued by publishers whose sole desire is to place before readers of all ages, good, clean stories that appeal to the spirit of romance of life—does not stimulate the imagination except in a healthy and noble way.

It is an ambitious program, but with the close cooperation of writers, publishers—and above all, the public—the time will soon come when the news stands will carry only the best stories by the best writetrs, produced with a careful eye to its wholesome effect on the general public.

SUICIDAL CHANCES

Accounts of suicides usually indicate a preference for the quickest and easiest way out of life. An exception comes from Cuba in a recent report stating that 65 girls, from 16 to 23 years of age, committed suicide in Havana during a three-week period because they were disappointed in love or tired of living. Each soaked her clothing with alcohol and applied a match, choosing this painful death in accordance with a historic Cuban tradition. What a way to die!

America rejoices that she has no such tradition. Perhaps a Cuban would conclude, however, that many of our citizens take suicidal chances with fire, when he reads that 10,000 persons are killed by fire annually and as many more are injured.

Americans take chances with fire by permitting faulty construction of hollow walls, unsafe chimneys, heating plants and roofs, and by neglecting rubbish. Factories and business buildings contain unprotected vertical openings, hazardous manufacturing processes, and lack sprinkler systems. The remedies for these hazards are often simple. In fact, it is difficult to visualize a fire that could not have been prevented had correct conditions been maintained —conditions that would at least retard the spread of the fire, holding it in check until the firemen could arrive.

Perhaps we will no longer take "suicidal chances" with fire when fully informed on this subject. It is the duty of those who know to spread the information.

THE FARMERS CORNER

By Ralph H. Taylor

California's program of agricultural research, judged by the acid test of cash returns to the farming industry, is paying both liberal and regular dividends!

Actual savings of many millions of dollars have been effected by the state's farmers as a result of the research program, according to a report on the practical value of the farm studies, made public today by Dean C. B. Hutchinson of the state college of agriculture.

And both savings and added profits will increase tremendously in the years ahead, as thousands of additional farmers adopt improved practices and adjust their operations in keeping with the findings of the research workers.

Auditing the books on a single research project to compute its exact, dollars-and-cents' value, Dean Hutchinson reported that the application of new cultivation and irrigation practices, resulting from research into the use of water by orchard trees and the movement of water in the soil, saved California's farmers $4,197,123 during 1931 alone.

Of this amount, $1,683,440 was saved in irrigation costs, while $2,513,683 was saved in cultivation charges. Dean Hutchinson comments: "Thus, savings made by only a part of the growers in only a part of the fruit-growing counties of the state, by the adoption of these two improved orchard practices, have amounted in a single year to more than twice the cost to the state of all the activities of the college of agriculture, including research, resident instruction and extension. Furthermore, had these improved practices been applied by growers in 1931 to all of the orchard acreage in these same counties to which they were applicable, the total savings would have been more than $10,000,000."

Showing the tremendous losses averted over a period of years by improved practices growing out of research work, the farm college head declared that $14,464,837 has been saved in irrigation and cultivation costs since 1925, when the college first made public its findings.

Giving a complete analysis of this single project to indicate the scope of the work, Dean Hutchinson reported that this study completely reversed the old theory of cultivation to insure retention of soil moisture. The research work, starting in 1920, disclosed that cultivation, except to prevent growth of weeds, grass and plants which draw moisture from the soil, was a waste of both money and energy.

"Many growers, who used to cultivate six to 12 or more times in a year, now cultivate only two or four times a year," Hutchinson said; "through this knowledge and the resulting change in practice the cost of cultivation is greatly reduced, and the soil is left in better condition for the penetration of water.

"In the same studies it was found that the plant can obtain water equally as well when the water content of the soil is just above the permanent wilting percentage, as when it is near field capacity. By use of this knowledge the wasting of much irrigation water and the danger of injury to the trees from leaving the soil dry too long may be avoided."

The practical results obtained by this and many other similar research projects demonstrates, beyond all question, that the farm organizations of California knew where they were going when they fought for legislation to permit such research programs.

It also demonstrates the need for sensible, intelligent economy cuts during the next legislature, rather than hit-or-miss methods which would endanger essential work that is paying millions of dollars in cash dividends.

The college of agriculture, incidentally, is setting a good example and minimizing the chance for unwise cuts by "cutting its own." The college budget requests for the coming two years, which will be submitted shortly, will be greatly reduced, but the saving will be accomplished where it will do the least damage to worthwhile work.

BOOKS

And Life Goes On, by Vicki Baum.

An automobile containing a millionaire, a movie actress, and a champion boxer skidded into a tree near Lohwinkel, small Rhineland town, and by so doing disrupted the even tenor of life for all the persons in that German village.

This is a brief synopsis of the latest novel by the author of the oft-advertised Grand Hotel. But the book cannot be properly described in such a fashion.

For, like its predecessor, this novel is chiefly remarkable for its vivid characters. The irritable, ambitious doctor, whose resemblance to St. George of dragon-killing fame can be perceived only by his wife, is skillfully drawn.

His wife, Elizabeth, tired young drudge, is realistic in her feminine longing for beauty and experience and in her maternal clinging to her husband.

The two are plodding together, working out a courageous scientific experiment, when the automobile accident changes their lives.

Not only the doctor and his Elizabeth, but the town's wealthy factory owner, the workingmen, the lords of a great estate, and the impudent school children, are affected when the millionaire, the movie actress, and the boxer are catapaulted into their midst.

Vicki Baum likes to tangle persons and circumstances and to picture their reactions on each other. In this novel she has demonstrated her ability at that game.

The Prince of the Moon, by Laura Hauck.

Sweet Nineteen, represented by Page Copeland, wanders into a moonlit garden with the prince of her dreams, whose handsomeness is augmented by his wealth, and whose wealth is heightened by his wit.

In the romance which results young Page, whose father is merely a modest real estate dealer and whose family can boast of nothing more than a simple brick home, whirls into society.

The whirl is breath-taking. In the pleasures of driving imported cars at eighty per, of pinning sheaves of orchids to her frocks, and of discovering that thousand-dollar bits of jewelry can accompany lover's kisses, Page almost forgets the high standards of her family.

But in the end this heroine, acting as story-book heroines always do and as real-life ones sometimes do, examines her lover with her mind instead of her heart. She finds that his gold is glittery but he is not genuine so she flounces back to honest obscurity.

Needless to say an honest and ambitious hero has been waiting her return, but she does not recognize his destiny as her hero. Anyway Miss Hauck removes all complications and concludes her tale in satisfactory manner to all readers.

The entire story is a pretty love tale with plenty of moonlight and heart throbs but no particular characters.

Campbell Hoopsters Divide Honors With Santa Clara Teams

By Dick Morton

Fighting savagely, the Campbell high basketball teams divided a doubleheader last Friday night with Santa Clara's basketeers, the 110-lb. team losing 5 to 9, and the 120-lb. team breaking through to win 15-8.

The 110-lb. game was a close, hard-fought battle throughout. The score at half time was 3-3. The second half continued as even with the Santa Clarans finding their shooting eyes in the last minute of play and winning with a sucker shot and a long one from the field. E. Williamson was high point man for the Campbell quint, scoring 3 points.

The starting lineup for the 110-lb. game was: J. Bayto, B. Corey, J. Mailais, H. Hyde, and E. Williamson.

Flashing an attack previously unseen by the Campbell cohorts, the 120-lb. team astounded the fans with their strong offense and defense. Ability to take advantage of the breaks was a prime factor in their victory. Gordon Stafford, sinking two field goals and four free throws for a total of 8 points was high point man for Campbell. The starting lineup was. J. Bloom, G. Stafford, R. Brydon, G. Lear and T. Pisano.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH NOTES

Next Sunday morning at the Congregational church services the Rev. J. H. Bennett will endeavor to give his reasons for supporting the 18th Amendment. He heartily invites any one who is opposed to this particular amendment to attend worship and hear the other point of view.

The position today is unsatisfactory all around yet that is no real argument for retreat back into the evils from which the nation has been rescued, by the heroism of our fathers and mothers. What can we do? The real answer is so simple that is should not need repeating, stated Mr. Bennett. He will review the subject and give his opinion as to the way out.

Over sixty young people of the Congregational Christian Endeavor groups attended the rally and conference of the Santa Clara county C. E. societies held at the Los Gatos Chrisian church last weekend.

Miss Gladys Merriman, retiring president of the county organization, who has had a most successful year, introduced the new officers who were elected at the rally. Why PUMP EFFICIENCY determines the cost of Irrigation

It may be that the water level in your vicinity has gone down or that your pump has lifted sand and for this or some other reason the pump parts are worn. If so, and only a test will prove it, the efficiency of your pump has been reduced, and from 15% to 45% of the power used is probably wasted. This waste can be avoided.

EXAMPLE:

The accompanying graph shows how power costs rise as pump efficiency drops. Horsepower and cost figures are based on a pumping plant with a capacity of 500 gallons per minute on a lift of 100 feet. The job to be done is flooding 162 acres to a depth of twelve inches (162-acre feet) in 1752 hours, or 73 days. If the pump efficiency is only 20%, a 60-horsepower motor has to be used, and the operating cost is $1,110. However, if the pump efficiency is increased to 55%, a 25-horsepower motor will do the same job for $465. There is a saving of $645.

The simplest way to reduce irrigating costs is to improve pump efficiency. An inefficient pump requires not only a larger motor but more power.

Experts estimate that the great majority of irrigation pumps in Northern and Central California are not more than 35% efficient.

Our Rural Power Representatives will gladly furnish you with the names of reliable pump engineers who will test your pump efficiency. For further information, write or telephone our nearest office.

GRAMMAR KIDS PREPAIRING FOR "SPOOK" PARTY

Sh! Did you see a wispy something trailing on that broom? Or did you perhaps hear the rustle of bat's wings?

There's an air of mystery around these days, for all the spirits and jolly Hallowe'en ghosts are preparing to attend the parties to be given at the Campbell grammar school Friday.

Wierd black witches are dusting off their tall caps and shampooing their midnight-shaded cats. Jack-o-Lantern elves are polishing their teeth and practicing their smiles. And off in the trees the owls are preening their feathers importantly, for on Hallowe'en night the owl is a king among birds.

Grammar school children and their teachers are awaiting Friday afternoon with joyful wonder. When at last it comes they will have decorated their schoolrooms and will be ready for celebrations in honor of the spirits of Hallowe'en.

YOUNG WOMEN'S SERVICE CLUB IN CHARITY WORK

Hallowe'en decorations and refreshments made Wednesday's meeting a gay affair.

Each class is preparing a party. Truly Hallowe'en refreshments of pumpkin pie and sweet cider will be served.

Mrs. W. F. Grattan, Mrs T. A. Cutting, Start New Industry

Campbell's newest factory has started, not with the blow of whistles, nor with the grinding of machinery and a smell of oil, but with a gentle bubbling of perfumed conctions on kitchen stoves and the careful mixture of pungent compounds in back gardens.

For Mrs. Worthin Grattan and Mrs. Theodare Cutting have organized the Eva May Products company, and are marketing the Heart's Delight lotion and the Cleans It- Cleaner, an effectual cleaning compound.

The hand lotion, which was compounded many years ago, by Dr. Charles N. Cooper, is a rosy fluid which is sold in a graceful silver-labeled bottle.
